

New Policy: Admission to Online Graduate Degree Programs

Admission to online graduate programs is contingent upon the University of Arkansas being able to deliver distance education to the country where the student is located. Admission to online programs may be denied by the Graduate School if the University of Arkansas is not authorized or if because of government regulations in the country the student is currently residing has declined to deliver distance education to that location. Students admitted to the on-campus program who wish to continue through distance delivery and who are located in a country the University of Arkansas does not offer distance education in may be withdrawn from their courses and not allowed to continue degree progress until the student is located in a country where distance education is permitted.
